CONFEDERATE GRAVESITES

(Contributed by Historian/Genealogist Compatriot Fred Boelt)

Continuing this month with the sons of Dr. Robert Major Garrett and his wife Susan Comfort Winder Garrett, their next two sons were too young to enter service at the beginning of the war. Henry Winder Garrett was born on December 23, 1844, in Williamsburg, and undoubtedly was educated in the local academies. In December 1862, Dr. Garrett received a letter from J. W. Blair stating that tuition at Virginia Military Institute was $400-500 per year and that it would be very difficult to gain admission.

However, Henry Garrett entered V. M. I. in Lexington, Virginia on April 22, 1863. In the following session while repeating the fourth class, serving as a private in Company A of the Corps of Cadets, he fought in the Battle of New Market on May 15, 1864. He wounded and captured a Union officer during this conflict. During the next session, he served with the Corps of Cadets in the trenches in Richmond. Henry Garrett resigned from V. M. I. on January 19, 1865, and joined J. S. Mosby's Rangers of the 43rd Virginia Cavalry Regiment and served with them until the end of the war.

After the war, Henry Garrett studied at the College of William and Mary in 1865-1866. He then studied law at the University of Virginia. On July 2, 1869, Henry Garrett was made an honorary graduate of the V. M. I. Class of 1867. Henry followed his older brother William to Giles County, Tennessee where he taught school and practiced law for three years. In a letter to his father dated July 5, 1874, Henry stated that he was in Cleburn, Johnson County, Texas, and that he had not get established a law practice but hoped to find a position teaching for one or two hours a day in a private home. Later, he did return to Williamsburg where he had a law practice and also was engaged in farming. He did not marry. Henry Winder Garrett died in Williamsburg on May 6, 1879, and was buried in the Garrett family plot in the Bruton Parish Church graveyard.

The Garretts' next son, Van Franklin Garrett, was born in Williamsburg on July 31, 1846. And like his brother, he attended the local academies and entered V. M. I. on April 22, 1863. Also while repeating the fourth class, he served as a private in Company B of the Corps of Cadets in the Battle of New Market. The following session, he joined the Corps of Cadets in Richmond, and on November 19, 1864, he was admitted to Stuart Hospital where he remained until he received a twelve day furlough on December 12th. Van Garrett resigned from the Corps of Cadets on January 25, 1865, and unofficial sources state that he joined Captain J. H. Thompson's Company of the Virginia Light Artillery. No official record of his post V. M. I. service has been found.

After the war, Van Garrett attended classes at the College of William and Mary in 1865-1866. From there, he took the medical course at the University of Virginia and went on to Bellevue Medical College in New York City, graduating in 1868. On July 2, 1869, he, too, was made an honorary graduate of the V. M. I. Class of 1867. Van Garrett left New York and went to Giles College in Tennessee where his older brother William Robertson Garrett served as president. He taught natural science there for three years, 1871-1874, and while he was there, the College of William and Mary conferred an honorary Master of Arts degree on him on February 22, 1871.

Still unmarried, Van Garrett moved to Baltimore to practice medicine. He returned to Williamsburg after his brother Henry's death in 1879 to look after his aging father. In 1888, he began to teach chemistry at the college and continued teaching there until 1924. On April 29, 1896, Van Garrett married Harriett Guion Nicholls. She was the daughter of Francis Tillou Nicholls, former General, CSA, twice governor of Louisiana, and Chief Justice of the Louisiana Supreme Court. Van and Harriett Garrett had one son and three daughters.

Van Franklin Garrett was a member of Bruton Parish Episcopal Church and served as Senior Warden there. He served on the city council several times and was a member of the Magruder-Ewell Camp, Confederate Veterans. Van Garrett died in Williamsburg on November 19, 1932, and was buried in the Garrett family plot in the Bruton Parish Church graveyard.
